Texas Flag Captured,

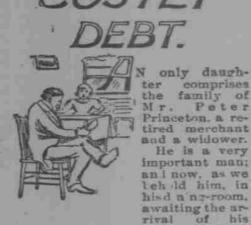

When flags are captured in the height of bat le, it shows close and severe fighting. A New Orleans paper states that in the bloody engagement which took place near Ma stield, the battle-worn and weather-besten bancaptured by Captain Doxie, of the Six- me.' teenth In iana mounted regiment, could of course be no child's play, and consequently the ground was piled better still, one does not go with exquisite politiness to the exwit a slain in the struggle for the possesion of that flag, which bore the inscription-"Texans never can be slaves." Captain Doxie, the hero of the figh', came forth from the battle covered with wounds, inflicted by sabre-stroke and pistol-s ot. The flag was brought down to New Orleans by Colonel Brisbane, of General Lee's staff, and was presented to Miss Mary Binny Banks, the "daughter of the baigade," in presence of her mother, at the residence of the General. The young lady showed a great deal of emotion as she took the battle stained trophy which had so long waved triumphantly in the centre of a heratomb of heroes slain -in her hand. Mrs. Banks made a few felling and commendatory remarks, complimenting the gallantry of Captain Dorie and his brave m n, and promising to interest berself in securing the promotion of those who had so nobly contended for the prize and torn it from the posession of a desperate foe. It was a red and white bann r, with blue union, but so old, faded, and battle-worn, that the colors could scarcely be distinguis ed.
